“ Ma, I just wish I could sit with you just one more time, and share a cup of coffee. You actually liked the coffee I made for you with the thickened vanilla Mighty Shake in it. I liked it too (for your sake)!!! I guess I'm lonesome for you. I am glad you are free of those awful wounds on your legs and the constant torture of the tight dressings. May you rest in peace, with no hip pain ever again. Wow, isn't that great!
And, now you can see!! Look down on us and ask God to keep us on the right path to be with you some day in heaven. I love you and will always miss you. Suzy###imported-begin##suzy###imported-end##

“ As "the disease," as Bob called A.L.S., progressed and he was no longer able to write legibly, he stopped trying to write. Then one day came a handwritten note from Jenny to Bob. Her loving words were so meaningful, but what was most important was the inspiration Bob got from the fact that she would struggle to write that note to him. He decided that if Jenny could muster the strength, energy and passion to write to him, he could do so as well. He wrote back to her and continued to write notes to others for as long as he could hold the pen. Thank you, Jenny, for your inspiration.##imported-begin##Judy Masserang##imported-end##

“ The one thing that i can clearly remember is when Emma was born and grandma Suzy came with grandma jenny to the hospital. When grandma jenny held Emma it was amassing to see her do it. To this day i look back to the picture of her and Emma in the hospital and it warms all of my heart. And now all i can say is that she will be missed. .)###imported-begin###Kayla Hering###imported-end##
